

This is outrageous. How could someone limit the broadcasting of a signal I actually pay for. If I wanted to listen to 'free' local broadcasts I would. I actually do listen to some of them that are quality but if I want to pay a company to broadcast radio to me then it should be fine.

Making a decision to limit this technology along with this type of content will put clamps on innovation and eventually slow the growth of economy. The local broadcast market must now compete with more stations which is what it all about competition. If the local broadcast companies are afraid then they are not very confident in their product.

Reagards,

Tim C.